

The more power your telescope has, the more likely that you see three distinct stars (if there are in fact three distinct stars).

The more power your statistical tool has, the more likely that you see differences among means (if there are in fact differences among group means in the population).